

Origini is a single-blind peer-reviewed journal of world prehistory and protohistory published yearly by the Sapienza University of Rome. The journal reports new archaeological research, method and issues of international significance to a broad academic and professional readership. The journal is a forum for the current debate on the basic topics of prehistoric archaeology and anthropology, contributing to the development of scientific achievements in these fields. We ask for original papers presenting new data in an interpretative framework of historical reconstruction and/or debating theoretical and methodological questions.

---

The Author of contribution guarantees that the article issued has not been published previously and that texts offered for publication are in no way an infringement of existing copyright. The Author accepts responsibility for obtaining permissions to reproduce in his/her article materials copyrighted by others. The Author agrees to hold the Journal Editor in Chief and the Publisher free from any claim, action or proceeding occasioned to them in consequence of any breach of the warranties mentioned above.

The Publisher has the exclusive rights on the entire volumes. The Authors retain the copyright of their own contributions and have the rights to reproduce reworked excerpts of their articles elsewhere, acknowledging Origini as the place of first publication and indicating the Publisher.

The Author, in submitting his/her paper, automatically agrees with the above mentioned rules.

One free copy of the publication per contributor shall be sent, delivery duties paid, to an address agreed upon by the Journal Editor in Chief and the Publisher. Each author will also receive a pdf copy of his /her contribution.